nutrients and water from food Diverticulosis the precursor to diverticulitis occurs when small bulging pouches known as diverticula form in the walls of the colon These pouches develop when weak spots in the colon's muscular layer give way under pressure creating pockets where waste can accumulate While diverticulosis is common especially in individuals over the age of 40 it often goes unnoticed because it doesn't typically cause symptoms However when one or more of these pouches becomes inflamed or infected it leads to diverticulitis Diverticulitis can cause significant pain particularly in the lower left side of the abdomen and may be accompanied by fever nausea and changes in bowel habits such as diarrhea or constipation The severity of diverticulitis can vary ranging from mild cases that can be treated with antibiotics and dietary changes to severe cases that may require hospitalization or surgery The causes of diverticulitis are still not fully understood but several factors are believed to contribute to its development One of the most significant factors is a low fiber diet which can lead to constipation and increased pressure within the colon Other risk factors include aging obesity lack of physical activity smoking and certain medications such as steroids or nonsteroidal anti inflammatory drugs NSAIDs Genetic predisposition may also play a role in the development of diverticular disease
