

attempt to teach a dog when other dogs are by. The weather should be warm; and choose a place where the shore slopes gradually in, so that the dog does not plunge out of his depth at once. Before teaching him to bring anything out of the water, he must be taught to retrieve on land, and always keep in so doing to one article, and if the puppy cannot be induced to fetch it, go for it yourself, taking him with you and keep showing it to him.

Tricks to teach Dogs

To teach a dog to shut the door, fetch and carry, take a biscuit for some celebrated name, and refuse it for another. Place a piece of cake or meat on his nose and keep it there, asking him who put it there, giving several names; and then ask your own, when only he should take it. To walk on hind legs, valse, cough, sneeze, turn somersaults, jump through hoops and over hurdles, stand up at the word 'attention,' tricks with cards. To teach shutting the door, a piece of biscuit or meat should be tied to the door-handle just above the dog's reach, and when the dog shuts the door he should be petted and the meat given.

To teach a Dog Card Tricks

Place a little piece of meat on the ace, a bit of biscuit on the queen, and a lump of sugar on the ten; then point out each card by name, and allow the dog to eat the pieces. Persevere in this for some days till the doggie knows the difference; then keep the pieces in your hand and give them as a reward whenever he takes the right card, saying 'No' sharply whenever he makes a mistake, and pet and caress when he does the trick well.

Washing Dogs

Great care should be taken in washing delicate dogs. The water should only be blood warm, and once a fortnight is the most that any dog should be washed; indeed, they should only be washed when necessary, as they can be kept very clean by brushing daily, and afterwards rubbing with an old silk handkerchief.

Sulpholine soap is the best thing to wash dogs with, and if the dog has fleas, add a teaspoonful of Condy's fluid to the water.

A dog should never be washed when suffering from cold, and should always be carefully dried afterwards. Dogs should never be washed in cold weather. I take my dogs on my lap, rub them thoroughly with a thick bath towel, roll them in flannel, and place them in their baskets before the fire, and when all but dry, comb and brush them and put them before the fire again. In the summer after drying I send them out in the sun for a run.

Hints and General Management of Dogs

The owners of dogs should attend to their general health, as it is easier to prevent disease than to cure it. The eyes, nose, gums, hair, and breath of a dog should be carefully noted. The eyes may be inflamed, or pale and sunken, the nose hot and dry, and the gums may be pale, all of which show disorganisation, which can speedily be rectified.

Change of air and diet will often do good when all other remedies fail. A change from town to country and the green fields, and from greasy meat to fresh milk will generally recruit a dog without the aid of medicine. Dogs should never be out during the intense heat of the day, as it is apt to produce fits, which often end fatally.

Dogs are much healthier fed on moderate meals. For night-watch-dogs their food should be given them in the morning; but if required quiet at night, feed them late, and don't leave bones for them to gnaw.

Dogs should never be allowed to lie and roast before the fire for hours together, which I often see, as it produces not only enlargement of the liver, but affects the brain and
