Higher Education - Reflections From the Field - Volume 1 , 2023-11-02 COVID wrought havoc on the world's economic systems Higher education did not escape the ravages brought on by the pandemic as institutions of higher education around the world faced major upheavals in their educational delivery systems Some institutions were prepared for the required transition to online learning Most were not Whether prepared or not educators rose to the challenge The innovativeness of educators met the challenges as digital learning replaced the face to face environment In fact some of the distance models proved so engaging that many students no longer desire a return to the face to face model As with all transitions some things were lost while others were gained This book examines practice in the field as institutions struggled to face the worst global pandemic in the last century The book is organized into four sections on The Perspectives of Higher Education COVID as a Catalyst for Change Embracing Online Learning as a Response to COVID and Post Covid The Way Forward It presents various perspectives from educators around the world to illustrate the struggles and triumphs of those facing new challenges and implementing new ideas to empower the educational process These discussions shed light on the impact of the pandemic and the future of higher education post COVID Higher education has been forever changed and higher education as it once was may never return While many questions arise the achievements in meeting and overcoming the pandemic illustrate the creativity and innovativeness of educators around the world who inspired future generations of learners to reach new heights of accomplishment even in the face of the pandemic

Host-parasite interactions at the cellular, tissue, and organism level Xuexian Yang, William Harold Witola, Hua Cong, Huongzhi Chen, 2024-05-31 Protozoan and helminth parasites infect animals and humans and cause debilitating pathologies that cause a variety of morbidities and deaths worldwide The ability of parasites to establish infection and cause disease in mammalian hosts is a result of a series of intricate mechanisms evolved by parasitic species to confront and evade the host's defensive responses along with the ability to use the host's metabolic and catabolic processes and host cellular organelles to their benefit For instance parasites may have predilection sites in the host that are not accessible to immune effector molecules and mechanisms may acquire host derived masking molecules can vary their surface molecules and can produce molecules that block or misguide the host immune responses The host s interactions with the parasite on the other hand are critical for the initiation and induction of host signaling events that are critical in mounting formidable defensive immune responses against the invading parasite Therefore the ability of a parasite to successfully establish infection and cause disease largely depends on its interaction with the host and the ability of the host to mount successful and effective resistance Thus studying host parasite interactions and cross talks is critical for understanding parasite infection and adaptation mechanisms within the host as well as for developing strategies for effective prevention and control of parasitic infections in humans and animals The topic will cover a wide spectrum of parasitic protozoa and helminths and provide an opportunity to share new molecular and translational advances in parasitic infections and diseases
