Health through Will Power James Joseph Walsh, 2024-02-14 Professor Stokes the great Irish clinician of the nineteenth century to whom we owe so much of our knowledge of the diseases of the heart and lungs and whose name is enshrined in terms commonly used in medicine in connection with these diseases has told a striking story of his experiences in a Dublin hospital that illustrates this very well An old Irishman who had been a soldier in his younger years and had been wounded many times was in the hospital ill and manifestly dying Professor Stokes after a careful investigation of his condition declared that he could not live a week though at the end of that time the old soldier was still hanging on to life ever visibly sinking Stokes assured the students who were making the rounds of his wards with him that the old man had at most a day or two more to live and yet at the end of some days he was still there to greet them on their morning visits After the way of medical students the world over though without any of that hard heartedness that would be supposed ordinarily to go with such a procedure for they were interested in the case as a medical problem the students began to bet how long the old man would live     Teacher Planner for the Secondary Classroom Randall S.
