The Eurasian Wheat Belt and Food Security Sergio Gomez y Paloma, Sébastien Mary, Stephen Langrell, Pavel Ciaian, 2016-10-11 This book provides an in depth analysis of the wheat production developments in the Eurasian region and assesses the potential contribution of the region to domestic and international food security In particular the book covers policy and institutional developments of the agricultural sector in Eurasia with a special focus on the horizontal issues relevant to the current and future potential growth of the wheat production such as land policy credit and finance privatization farm restructuring and environmental challenges Global food security is a major societal concern in the light of an increasing population which is projected to grow from around seven billion today to almost 10 billion in 2050 Two most likely ways to achieve the much needed food production growth are expansion of land cultivation or increase in crop yields and total factor productivity The only region with a significant amount of uncultivated arable land that is at the same time experiencing rising agricultural productivity is the Eurasian wheat belt comprising of Russia Ukraine Kazakhstan and the Central Asian countries Uzbekistan Tajikistan Turkmenistan and Kirgizstan This makes the region a potential hotspot for driving the future growth of global agriculture Such prospects require a detailed investigation of Eurasia s future perspectives in terms of food production with a focus on wheat and its potential contribution to regional and global food security Food Security and Global Environmental Change John Ingram, Polly Ericksen, Diana Liverman, 2012-07-26 Global environmental change GEC represents an immediate and unprecedented threat to the food security of hundreds of millions of people especially those who depend on small scale agriculture for their livelihoods As this book shows at the same time agriculture and related activities also contribute to GEC by for example intensifying greenhouse gas emissions and altering the land surface Responses aimed at adapting to GEC may have negative consequences for food security just as measures taken to increase food security may exacerbate GEC The authors show that this complex and dynamic relationship between GEC and food security is also influenced by additional factors food systems are heavily influenced by socioeconomic conditions which in turn are affected by multiple processes such as macro level economic policies political conflicts and other important drivers The book provides a major accessible synthesis of the current state of knowledge and thinking on the relationships between GEC and food security Most other books addressing the subject concentrate on the links between climate change and agricultural production and do not extend to an analysis of the wider food system which underpins food security this book addresses the broader issues based on a novel food system concept and stressing the need for actions at a regional rather than just an international or local level It reviews new thinking which has emerged over the last decade analyses research methods for stakeholder engagement and for undertaking studies at the regional level and looks forward by reviewing a number of emerging hot topics in the food security GEC debate which help set new agendas for the research community at large Published with Earth System Science Partnership GECAFS and SCOPE Food Security and Sociopolitical Stability Christopher B.
