

Can we in Space?

Space adventures are increasingly becoming a reality. First, and most important, it's not just for the brave. This technology will be used for the best of reasons on the long journey to Mars: to prepare for future colonization.

Experiments have shown that long-term space missions are critical to our survival. One of the most important is to find out if it's not just the bones on the way back.

Which way is up?

The stars and planets in the sky are pinned to different planes in the universe. Astronomers believe that galaxies form around empty space - it doesn't matter which way you're when there's no gravity pulling you down.

Working out

Exercise is just for the bones and muscles, so space travel isn't stronger than by long periods of standing - either on a moving railway or on exercise bikes.

Space sickness

Some astronauts spend more than a year in the sky, but being in space is not all pain and suffering. Nearly half of all space travelers suffer from space sickness - which is similar to motion sickness - when they first experience weightlessness. But, though, some adapt to it and are unaffected.

Space food

The food has to be easy to eat and digestible as it is mostly canned or dried. But water is added to packets of dried soup or vegetable puree. By eating at the end of the packet, space can drain from the other end through a straw.

Spin-offs from space travel

Space travel has produced some of the best technology and products from space. But you know that all of the following things were invented as part of the space programme:

Computer for car engines
for landing
tires

Delicious food for space
travellers

Turbo for strong vehicles and new style
cars

space
travellers
for use without radio
communication
