Other factors are equally worthy of attention. For the information presented in this study is primarily descriptive, the statistical analysis to identify factors associated is limited to the binary relationship of compliance or non-compliance. It is possible that there are other conditions, beyond financial, that encourage better compliance. Consequently, the low level of compliance may be influenced by the fact that the statistical model provides no additional information to support targeted programs. However, strategies to promote well-motivated and ethical behaviors may include the removal of the monetary reward, providing the system with a choice mechanism to help limit the level of non-compliance, and providing a negative consequence for those who report reported compliance. Further research is warranted.
