Families Communicating With Children Families Communicating With Children:

Families Communicating With Children Thomas Socha, Julie Yingling, 2010-07-26 This book offers a fresh and insightful introduction to children's communication development that emphasizes how families help children learn to communicate optimally. Writing for communication students, parents, teachers, and all who care for children, the authors argue that optimal development of children's communication competencies depends on family participation in everyday learning situations that challenge children's skills and build communication confidence. The book mirrors the organization and coverage of existing family communication textbooks, making it a valuable addition to coursework about families, communication, and development. Chapter topics include an overview of communication development, universal stages and cultural variations, communication development at home, nonverbal, verbal, and mediated skills, relational and group dynamics in the home, including variations by ethnicity and family configuration, family roles and family rules for providing stability and structuring behavior, family resiliency in coping with challenges, strategies for fostering positive communication development in the home. Families Communicating with Children emphasizes the positive effects of family influence and draws attention to cross-cultural variations in parenting as well as universal steps in development. These features clarify the process of communication development and offer an optimistic view of the future for the many shapes families assume today.

Parents and Children Communicating with Society Thomas J. Socha, Glen Stamp, 2010-03-17 The volume opens a new frontier in parent-child communication research as it brings together veteran researchers and newcomers to explore the communication of parents and children as they create relationships outside the family. The chapters herein examine communication processes and problems of parents and children as they interact with childcare, healthcare, education, and youth sports; investigate the unique challenges facing various types of families as they communicate outside the family, e.g., stepfamilies and gay/lesbian/bisexual families; and consider the role of media in family relationships outside of home. The primary audiences for the volume include scholars, researchers, and graduate students studying communication in families, children's communication, communication in personal relationships, organizational communication, group communication, and health communication. It will also be of interest to psychologists who study families, children, and organizations; sociologists who study families, children, and organizations; education researchers; teachers; coaches; family physicians; and family therapists graduate students It has the potential for use in courses in family communication family studies family sociology and child development
