Baltimore Pit Beef

6 WHY THIS RECIPE WORKS

Baltimore's "barbecue" tradition involves cooking a massive slab of beef against the slow heat of the pit. Superior pieces of beef are piled on a spit, then with "dry" season," a simple mix of spices and browned. We set out to catch the essence of the beloved sandwich for the home kitchen.

START WITH THE RIGHT MEAT. To capture the whole lot of beef we use in this recipe, we went right to the source, and found out that many of Baltimore's pit beef vendors use whole top or bottom rounds. Although the world, these cuts are large and require a meat slicer to cut them thin enough to be stacked. Instead, we turned to top-bottom round, the affordable, tenderloin, and flavor made it a fast luncher favorite for grill-master beef and a perfect candidate for this recipe.

DOUBLE THE FLAVOR. What sets pit beef apart is the salt, spice, deeply blackened crust. Most recipes called for a paprika-based spice rub containing black pepper, cayenne, garlic powder, dried oregano, and salt. Since the ingredients are simple, getting the ratio right was important—but even more important was making sure that the flavors penetrated beyond just the surface of the meat. While many restaurants "marinate" the meat with the spices for several days, we wanted to speed up the process. To get the meat flavor in less time, we cut the meat in half to maximize surface area and then let the dry rub penetrate the meat for at least 4 hours. The bonus? Twice the smoke, spicy crust.

COOK FROM THE INSIDE OUT. To protect our meats from dehydrating an over-cracked, grey ring around the edges, we wrapped them in aluminum foil and started them over an indirect flame. Later, we removed the foil and cooked up the grill to achieve the signature dark crust with a perfectly rare interior.
