Gen. Mendel's Experiment (1865) Mendel's Law of Inheritance

Genetic inheritance is the process by which traits are passed from parents to offspring. Mendel's experiments with pea plants led to the discovery of the laws of inheritance.

1. The first law of inheritance states that each parent contributes one allele for each trait to their offspring.
2. The second law of inheritance states that alleles for different traits are inherited independently of each other.
3. The third law of inheritance states that the expression of a trait is determined by the combination of alleles inherited from both parents.
4. The fourth law of inheritance states that the expression of a trait is determined by the dominance or recessiveness of the alleles.
5. The fifth law of inheritance states that the expression of a trait is determined by the interaction of multiple genes.
6. The sixth law of inheritance states that the expression of a trait is determined by the environment.
