Jaeger, 2004-12-13 The study of speech errors or slips of the tongue is a time honored methodology which serves as a window to the representation and processing of language and has proven to be the most reliable source of data for building theories of speech production planning However until Kids Slips there has never been a corpus of such errors from children with which to work This is the first developmental linguistics research volume to document how online processing is revealed in young children ages 18 months through 5 years through their slips of the tongue. Thus this text provides a new methodology and data source which will greatly expand our ability to uncover the details of early language development. Professor Jaeger's groundbreaking book incorporates both details of her methodology and findings with implications for different aspects of language development including phonetics and phonology, the lexicon, semantics, morphology, and syntax. While all the child data is included in the book, a Web site hosted by the author provides readers with the adult data as well. Kids Slips targets those who study language development in linguistics, developmental psychology, and speech and hearing, as well as those who study language representation and processing more generally in the same disciplines. Speech Production and Speech Modelling W.J. Hardcastle,Alain Marchal,2012-12-06 Speech sound production is one of the most complex human activities it is also one of the least well understood This is perhaps not altogether surprising as many of the complex neurological and physiological processes involved in the generation and execution of a speech utterance remain relatively inaccessible to direct investigation and must be inferred from careful scrutiny of the output of the system from details of the movements of the speech organs themselves and the acoustic consequences of such movements Such investigation of the speech output have received considerable impetus during the last decade from major technological advancements in computer science and biological transducing making it possible now to obtain large quantities of quantative data on many aspects of speech articulation and acoustics relatively easily Keeping pace with these advancements in laboratory techniques have been developments in theoretical modelling of the speech production process There are now a wide variety of different models available reflecting the different disciplines involved linguistics speech science and technology engineering and acoustics The time seems ripe to attempt a synthesis of these different models and theories and thus provide a common forum for discussion of the complex problem of speech production Such an activity would seem particularly timely also for those colleagues in speech technology seeking better more accurate phonetic models as components in their speech synthesis and automatic speech recognition systems
