Financial Institutions And Development In China:

Financial Reform and Economic Development in China James Laurenceson, Joseph C.H. Chai, 2003-01-01 China's prospects of successfully completing the transition to a market economy and becoming the world's largest economy during the 21st Century depend on the future sustainability of high rates of economic growth. This book is a comprehensive, balanced and realistic assessment of China's financial reform program and future direction. Covering not only the banking sector but also non-bank financial institutions, stock market development and external financial liberalization, the authors examine the impact of financial reform on economic development in China during the reform period. This volume will facilitate a more accurate assessment of the Chinese approach to financial reform and will therefore allow more informed future policy choices for both China and other developing and transitional countries. The Financial Development of China Rixu

Lan, 2024-11-26 The book builds an overview of Chinese financial development in the past 70 years since the founding of the PRC. China's finance has experienced a complex evolution process which could be roughly divided into two major stages. In the 30 years before the reform and opening up, China built a new financial system through integrating finance in the old and new liberated areas based on the development of the financial industry during the revolutionary war and then quickly established a financial system with the simple purpose of managing funds to meet the needs of the centralized socialist economic system. In more than 40 years after the reform and opening up, the role of China's financial system has gradually shifted from managing funds to guiding the market. A multi-level financial system was formed and centered on the People's Bank of China with complete functions, diverse forms, collaborative division and mutual complement. The transformation of China's finance functions has greatly promoted the rapid growth of China's economy for 35 years. In the current economic restructuring, the Internet model led by Internet finance has undoubtedly triggered the 'squid effect' on China's economic development and financial sector innovation. Many areas such as third-party payment and online lending have begun to lead globally. Furthermore, the establishment of an inclusive financial system has brought financial functions closer to their essential role of serving the real economy. Financial Institutions and Development in China Satyananda J.

Gabriel, 2013-01-01 Can the Chinese Party state maintain high rates of economic growth going forward? Rapid economic growth requires an ever-increasing quantum of finance capital. The source of new capital for Chinese firms was once exclusively the state but has now shifted to debt and equity securities sold in financial markets. In addition, financial restructuring and export promotion have provided a means for unleashing hidden sources of capital, including capital in hard currency. Hard currency capital has been particularly important in the acquisition by Chinese firms and other institutions of modern technology. Modernization is a key objective of the Party state as embodied in the Four Modernizations concept of Zhou Enlai. The primary focus of this book will be the institutional market and policy innovations in the financial sector that have provided for acceleration in the rate of growth of capital and modernization. It explores the connections between Finance and Development, September 2017 International Monetary Fund. External Relations Dept., 2017-09-05. This paper focuses on the United States and the United Kingdom that were the main architects of the post-1945 order with the creation of the United Nations system, but they now appear to be pioneers in the reverse direction, steering an erratic, inconsistent and domestically controversial course away from multilateralism. Other countries, meanwhile, for various reasons are incapable of assuming that global leadership and the rest of the world likely would not support a new hegemon in any event. The postwar system created at the Bretton Woods New Hampshire conference in 1944 should be credited with economic growth, a reduction in poverty and the absence of destructive trade wars. It built a comity that encourages to this day cooperation on issues as diverse as taxation, financial regulation, climate change policy and terrorism financing. The central postwar concern was international financial stability. The United States and the newly created International Monetary Fund were at the center of a system that sought to maintain that stability by linking exchange rates to the dollar with the IMF the arbiter of any changes.
