Portney, John Peter Weyant, 1999 In policymaking economists may use discount rates to compare present with future costs and benefits In this landmark book a number of the world's foremost economists reconsider the appropriate use of discounting for the future This work should go a long way toward refining the economic dimensions of public policy particularly in environmental matters As with the policies it discusses the impact of the book should be felt tomorrow as well as today Cumulated Index to the Books , 1999 Handbook for Environmental Risk Decision Making C. Sunstein, Arden Rowell, 2005 There is an elaborate debate over the practice of discounting regulatory benefits such as environmental improvements and decreased risks to health and life when those benefits will not be enjoyed until some future date Economists tend to think that as a general rule such benefits should be discounted in the same way as money many philosophers and lawyers doubt that conclusion on empirical and normative grounds Both sides neglect a simple point Once government has converted regulatory benefits into monetary equivalents what is being discounted is merely money not regulatory benefits as such No one seeks to discount health and life only the money that might be used to reduce threats to these goods To be sure cost benefit analysis with discounting can produce serious problems of intergenerational equity but those problems involving the obligations of the present to the future require an independent analysis Failing to discount will often hurt rather than help future generations Solutions to the problem of intergenerational equity should not be conflated with the question whether to discount Public Choice, Intergenerational Equity and the Social Rate of Discount Stephen Paul Adolph Brown, 1979 Discounting and Intergenerational Equity Theodoros Boditsis, University of Manchester. Institute for Development Policy and Management, 1999 Intergenerational Equity and Sustainability J. Roemer, K. Intergenerational Equity and the Social Discount Rate Helen Scarborough, 2011 Recent modelling of the costs and benefits of climate change has renewed debate regarding assumptions for the social discount rate in analysing the impacts of environmental change Previous literature suggests two key factors influence estimates of the social discount rate the rate of pure time preference and the elasticity of marginal utility of future consumption These components of the social discount rate reinforce the linkages between the choice of social discount rate and intergenerational distribution This paper addresses the question of the relationship between intergenerational equity and the social discount rate and promotes the application of intergenerational distributional weights as a means of incorporating intergenerational equity preferences in policy analysis Intergenerational equity adjusted social discount rates are derived as a means of decomposing the intergenerational equity aspect of the social discount rate The work has significant policy implications for projects with long time frames given the sensitivity of Cost Benefit Analysis outcomes to decisions regarding the social discount rate Symposium:
