- Is your initial introduction for you? 100% NO
- Is everything at work self-directed? 100% NO
- Are you getting along at work? 100% NO
- If you selected 100% answers, fill this in as often as you please.

Extending Activity

Remember the game "Simon Says"? This is a game of self-discipline. Think about other childhood games—which ones teach self-discipline and how do they do that?

Discipline on a Resume

Figuring out how to set yourself apart from the competition—other job seekers—can be tough. While it is important to show off your experience and education, don't forget soft skills. Soft skills are characteristics you possess that others may not and may be what puts you over the top.

Now that it's time to start applying for jobs, you have to update your resume. There are many ways to work in the concept of being disciplined. The first, and easiest, is to add it to your "Core Competencies" (aka Skills List). The best way to include that you are disciplined is to work it into your summary paragraph.

This is a lot of skills that generally shows up just beneath your summary paragraph. A strong "Core Competencies" section will contain about 15 skills or keywords with a strong mix of hard and soft skills.

You could simply stick the word "disciplined" in the list, but that doesn't say a lot. The best recommendation would be to pair it with another soft skill, like "Disciplined Self-Starter" or "Goal-Directed Problem Solver." The skill you add doesn't have to contain the word "disciplined." You can also add it to the summary paragraph (Cover Summary) with it the first right below your title. This paragraph is your elevator speech. I loosely answer the tell-me-about-yourself interview question. In this paragraph you can talk about leading teams and motivating others. Maybe you say you can work independently or with others. However you decide to include this soft skill, make sure you do, but don't discount the importance of flexibility—an equally desirable trait.
