

Phase III Study // Cancer Pain Management

Customized Consultation // For a study with extremely narrow inclusion criteria, our country-by-country analysis and customized plans pinpointed specific recruitment barriers, which, along with coaching, enabled country managers and monitors to motivate sites struggling with slow study start-up issues.

Number That Counts // For every country, a tailored plan. Whether the barriers were drug import, patient ignorance of pain as a by-product of cancer, or site frustration, BBK collaborated with country study managers and monitors to identify the most pressing issues, then coached them in overcoming the issues with clearly messaged campaign materials.

Objective // Enroll 1145 patients into two cancer pain protocols.

Challenges // Complex protocol with narrow inclusion criteria; slow country and site start-up affecting site motivation; patient attitudes toward cancer pain.

Results // Customized plans and coaching empowered country managers and monitors to effectively support sites with lagging motivation and increase enrollment rates.

Expert Analysis

Not only does cancer pain often go unrecognized by patients, in some countries, pain is considered something merely to be borne, not treated. As well, oncologists are not always focused on pain symptoms and treatment. To overcome these attitudinal issues, BBK created and localized a communications program with patient-facing materials to help investigators and coordinators bring up the topic, to establish the importance of and their interest in treating these symptoms, and to introduce the study. The messaging brought pain to the forefront of the conversation between investigator and patient, and encouraged the patient to consider a clinical study.
