Cash flows related to financing reflect amounts received by borrowing or from issuing stock, as well as payments made to retire debt, repurchase stock, and provide dividends to owners. For example, did May Company increase its financing through debt and equity?

One additional category occasionally included in the statement of cash flows relates to significant noncash activities. These are activities related to investing or financing, but that do not generate or use cash. For example, a company might have convertible bonds outstanding; the conversion of these bonds into common stock is an important change in financing but does not affect cash. Gateway has chosen to report noncash investing and financing activities in Note 11 to its financial statements rather than in its cash flow statement, as shown in Appendix A.
