

John Donne (1572-1631)

John Donne (1572-1631) — Poet, Dean of St. Pauls and prose writer. He is (and was) one of the most celebrated writers of the Renaissance period. Originally a Roman Catholic he gradually drifted from Catholicism, owing to unresolved spiritual commitment, and was finally ordained into the Anglican Church in 1615. He was a widely travelled Renaissance homme (man), and his erudition (great learning) reflects itself through his extensive works which cover an enormous variety of genres and subjects. His courtship of Ann Moore (older spelling, More) and the consequent secret marriage was a sensational romantic piece from real life, and it shows the real Donne — as in poetry so in life — passionate, turbulent yet capable of the deepest spiritual commitment.

Donne's poetical pieces hardly appeared in print during his lifetime. His Collected Poems came out posthumously in 1633, mostly comprising his early work. His poetry generally lends itself to two broad divisions — the secular (often amatory) lyrics, and his later religious verse, although the latter was an organic development from the former. His most celebrated love-lyrics belong almost unexceptionably to his pre-marriage days (and the best of them are addressed to Ann Moore), contained in Songs and Sonets. His Elegies, written about the same period, present poems which are by no means smooth like the conventional elegies; they are racy, sinuous and colloquial with a defiant self-confidence. They are examples of the young poet's energetically passionate verse. Donne defied the Elizabethan convention in all departments of poetry — matter, form and structure, and the spirit and manner. He replaced the sugared mellifluity (having sweet sounds and a smooth flow) of Elizabethan poetic diction by harsh, 'unpoetic' words and phrases; the smooth-running metre was replaced by a variety of most daringly irregular rhythms and violations of set prosodic measures; in his verse he was most candidly erotic and physically urgent; and his poetry was 'metaphysical' in its witty, reflective twists to ideas, and withal, its cerebral conceits.

Good Morrow is one of those 55 love poems which were given the heading Songs and Sonets. If some of these poems are frankly sensual, or at times irreverently (disrespectfully) scornful, even cynical, there are still others, like "Good Morrow" which are tender and passionate. In his love poems he is often busy exploring the relation between the body and the soul, and his poems on Ann (Moore) Donne celebrate mutual love with such a spiritual sincerity that they seem to anticipate the 'divine' poems of Donne that were to follow them. However, the metaphysical dalliance of wit is
