Diagnostics of Manipulations

Heribert Wienkamp, 2025-01-27 Manipulations are encountered at every turn and in countless everyday situations If this is the case the early recognition of manipulations takes absolute precedence This is especially true for specialists regarding their diagnostics and analysis In everything that is presented and offered in verbal expressions the tentative differentiation between fiction and truth is the focus of the events Because only a reasonably complete and truthful outline of the problem contains the potential for gaining insight or uncovering lies or half truths Lies deceptions excuses etc are manipulative activities or reactions that are intended to create a different namely consciously false impression However manipulative maneuvers can be observed and require further investigation not only in interpersonal situations but also in larger social contexts or systems for example to successfully play games like chess or to solve problems through regulations accepted by all This publication could particularly benefit the following target groups executives HR experts in academia and practice and specialists who need to assess the credibility of statements based on fiction and truth or who are involved in other support mandates
