- The elements of mathematics (numbers and set theory) were not made available to mathematicians (see change in subject classification to a higher generalization) until the 1950s when the first edition of the Handbook of Mathematics was published by the American Mathematical Society. A parallel situation is, of course, the situation with regard to the other sciences (physics, chemistry, biology, etc.) which were not made available to mathematicians until the 1950s when the first edition of the Handbook of Mathematics was published.
