

The system is designed to maintain the temperature of the process within a specified range. The controller uses a PID (Proportional-Integral-Derivative) control algorithm to adjust the actuator output based on the temperature deviation. The actuator then adjusts the process parameters to bring the temperature back to the setpoint.

1.1. Introduction
 This section introduces the temperature control system and its components. It describes the system's purpose, which is to maintain a constant temperature in a process. The system consists of a sensor, a controller, an actuator, and a process. The sensor measures the temperature, the controller processes the data, the actuator adjusts the process, and the process output is fed back to the sensor.

1.2. System Architecture
 This section describes the system architecture, showing the flow of data and control signals between the components. The sensor sends data to the controller, which sends control signals to the actuator. The actuator then adjusts the process, and the process output is fed back to the sensor.

1.3. Control Algorithm
 This section details the control algorithm used by the controller. It is a PID (Proportional-Integral-Derivative) control algorithm, which adjusts the actuator output based on the temperature deviation. The proportional term reacts to the current error, the integral term reacts to the accumulated error, and the derivative term reacts to the rate of change of the error.

1.4. Results and Discussion
 This section presents the results of the system's performance. It shows the temperature profile over time, demonstrating that the system successfully maintains the temperature within the desired range. The discussion highlights the system's ability to respond to temperature deviations and adjust the process parameters accordingly.
