

Group Three

Scale Exercises for training the tongue and fingers to work together, observing that both the muscles of the lips and tongue contract and relax according to the suggestions in the preceding groups (no-contrast while ascending and relax while descending the scale). Remember to play each exercise in one breath. This builds up endurance which is the most essential factor in all wind instrument playing, and when fully acquired, relieves the constant tension of the lips. As another practical expedient, the player should commence each exercise by taking a good healthy breath, filling the lungs with all the air they will hold. The change of time is to be observed in every other exercise, without taking an extra breath at the change.
