THEY CONTROL THE AIRFLOW

Let's explore the world of the specialist of a motorcycle's carburetors, examining the knowledge between the elements which regulate fuel delivery.

Motorcycle carburetors are devices which have been perfected over the years to provide the engine with the correct mixture of fuel and air, adapting to the different operating conditions of the engine.

Like all carburetors, they have a common base, the float chamber, which is supplied with fuel from the fuel tank through a filter.

For the engine, the fuel is then delivered through the jets.

Fuel Jetting

The jets are the elements which regulate the fuel delivery to the engine, and they are located in the float chamber, in the form of small holes, generally in the form of a cone.

The jets are also called "venturi" jets, because they are located in the venturi, the part of the carburetor where the fuel is drawn into the engine.

The venturi effect is the result of the Bernoulli principle, which states that the pressure of a fluid decreases as its velocity increases. In the case of a carburetor, the fuel is drawn into the venturi, where it is mixed with the air.

The jets are also called "venturi" jets, because they are located in the venturi, the part of the carburetor where the fuel is drawn into the engine.
