A Comparison of Suicide Rates Amongst the Military, Veterans, Law Enforcement, and the Civilian Population

Steven Sonza, 2018 The purpose of this dissertation was to determine whether there is a difference in the suicide rates among service members veterans law enforcement and the general American population Based on current research the researcher hypothesized that the service member and veteran suicide rates are higher than those among law enforcement and the general population The researcher used a mixed quantitative and qualitative approach to examine archival data from the Department of Defense Suicide Event Report the VA Suicide Data Report the Badge of Life Suicide Report and the CDC annual report on deaths within the U S A A qualitative analysis indicated several factors as to why the suicide rate for the veteran and military populations was higher than law enforcement and the general population which included access to firearms loss of intimate relationships exposure to trauma without pre screenings and lack of access to care

Defense Health Care United States. Government Accountability Office, 2021 Suicide is a public health problem facing all populations including the military From 2014 to 2019 the rate of suicide increased from 20.4 to 25.9 per 100,000 active component servicemembers Over the past decade DOD has taken steps to address the growing rate of suicide in the military through efforts aimed at prevention This report examines DOD's suicide prevention efforts including among other objectives 1 the extent to which non clinical efforts are assessed for being evidence based and effective and 2 any impediments that hamper the effectiveness of these efforts GAO recommends that 1 DSPO and the military services develop a process to ensure that individual non clinical suicide prevention efforts are assessed for effectiveness 2 DSPO and the military services work together to develop and use consistent suicide related definitions and 3 DOD improve collaboration on its annual suicide reports to reduce duplication of effort

Preventing Suicide in the U.S. Military United States. Department of Defense. Suicide Prevention and Response Independent Review Committee, 2022 In December 2022 the SPRIRC presented Secretary Austin with this report and ten recommendations addressing overarching issues within the military that the SPRIRC believe will improve service member well being by improving operations and infrastructure An additional 117 recommendations are provided within the four strategic directions of the Defense Strategy for Suicide Prevention In this report the SPRIRC emphasized that effectively preventing and responding to suicide will require a multifactorial approach as deaths by suicide among service members are complex thus simple or singular strategies will not work The recommendations are listed in the table below where the SPRIRC also provided priority ratings based on our expertise and experience in determining what strategies could have the most impact at reducing suicide in the military Context and rationale for the recommendations are provided within each section

Suicide Prevention United States. Government Accountability Office, 2022 In 2020 DOD recorded 384 active component suicide deaths representing a 33.5 percent increase in the suicide rate since 2016 Some of these servicemembers were stationed at remote OCONUS installations defined by GAO as meeting DOD criteria involving factors such as harsh living conditions and limited resources this report examines among other objectives the extent to which DOD and the military services have in relation to remote OCONUS installations 1 collected required suicide incident data and what is known about the incidence of suicide and related risk factors among servicemembers during 2016-2020 2 established and ensured implementation of policies programs and activities that address suicide prevention and 3 established guidance and training for key personnel for responding to suicide deaths and attempts GAO is making 14 recommendations including that DOD establish a process to assess suicide risk at remote OCONUS installations three services establish oversight of installations and DOD improve guidance and training for commanders
