

The book cover features a dark, atmospheric illustration of a cemetery at dusk or dawn. In the center, a classical building with a pediment and columns stands behind a row of tombstones. To the right, a large, gnarled tree with sparse leaves looms over a tombstone. A young girl in a dark dress is perched on the edge of a tombstone, looking towards the building. The sky is a mix of orange, yellow, and dark blue, with a few leaves falling. The overall mood is mysterious and haunting.

The Making of the Medieval Middle East Jack Tannous, 2018-12-04 A bold new religious history of the late antique and medieval Middle East that places ordinary Christians at the center of the story In the second half of the first millennium CE the Christian Middle East fractured irreparably into competing churches and Arabs conquered the region setting in motion a process that would lead to its eventual conversion to Islam Jack Tannous argues that key to understanding these dramatic religious transformations are ordinary religious believers often called the simple in late antique and medieval sources Largely agrarian and illiterate these Christians outnumbered Muslims well into the era of the Crusades and yet they have typically been invisible in our understanding of the Middle East s history What did it mean for Christian communities to break apart over theological disagreements that most people could not understand How does our view of the rise of Islam change if we take seriously the fact that Muslims remained a demographic minority for much of the Middle Ages In addressing these and other questions Tannous provides a sweeping reinterpretation of the religious history of the medieval Middle East This provocative book draws on a wealth of Greek Syriac and Arabic sources to recast these conquered lands as largely Christian ones whose growing Muslim populations are properly understood as converting away from and in competition with the non Muslim communities around them
