

What is cellular respiration?

All organisms require energy to power their cells.

Remember: Passive transport does not require energy. Cells need energy for all other activities!

Cellular respiration is the process cells use to create energy in the form of ATP.

Cells break down organic material (e.g. glucose) to make ATP energy.

Autotrophs make their own food (glucose) but still need to break it down to make ATP.

Heterotrophs eat organic material; they can't make their own food!

What is needed for aerobic cellular respiration?

Cellular respiration is the chemical equation for that.

Think about what YOU breathe in from our previous video!

Eq.: $\text{Glucose} + \text{Oxygen}$

$\rightarrow \text{Carbon Dioxide} + \text{Water} + \text{Energy}$

$\text{C}_6\text{H}_{12}\text{O}_6 + 6\text{O}_2 \rightarrow 6\text{CO}_2 + 12\text{H}_2\text{O} + \text{ATP}$

Why do cells make ATP?

ATP is a very energy dense molecule.

Cells "peel off" the last phosphate to release the energy!

ATP is composed of:

1. Sugar (deoxyribose) base (A)
2. Phosphate (phosphate) base (P)
3. Phosphate groups (very stable, very negatively charged)

Energy stored in the bonds of your food is used to add another phosphate group to ADP, turning it into ATP.

ADP = adenosine diphosphate (2 phosphates)

ATP = adenosine triphosphate (3 phosphates)

Why does ATP have so much energy?

ATP is a high-energy molecule.

To understand why you must understand:

- negative charges repel other negative charges
- phosphate is a very negatively charged functional group

What is ATP used for?

ATP is like currency for the cell because every cell processes using ATP to power its work.

Anything that requires energy from the cell, requires ATP (because this is where energy is stored).

Think about all the things you like to do for fun. Most of these require energy (directly or indirectly).

ATP is used for:

- Mechanical work = physically moving stuff. Ex: moving a molecule from one place in a cell to another, muscle fiber movement, cilia/beta (propeller) motion.
- Transport work = transporting materials against a concentration gradient. Transporting large molecules across a membrane. Ex: transporting Na⁺ from outside of cell (concentration low) to high concentration.
- Chemical work = building new molecules. Ex: synthesizing nucleic acids (polymers) from monomers.

ATP has energy stored in the bonds of the sugar-phosphate. ATP is used to power the movement of the myosin head, moving the actin.

Active transport requires ATP because it moves Na⁺ and K⁺ against their concentration gradient.

Glucose is a simple sugar. Glycogen is a complex polysaccharide. It is a storage form of glucose, which is used for energy.

ATP has energy stored in the bonds of the sugar-phosphate. ATP is used to power the movement of the myosin head, moving the actin.
