

INTRAMUSCULAR MANUAL THERAPY / “DRY NEEDLING” FAQs

What is “dry needling” – Dry needling is an invasive procedure in which a solid filament needle is inserted into the skin and muscle directly at a myofascial trigger point. A myofascial triggerpoint consists of multiple contraction knots, which are related to the production and maintenance of the pain cycle.

Is “dry needling” similar to acupuncture? – There are many similarities and differences between dry needling and acupuncture. Dry needling is often called biomedical acupuncture. Physical therapists at Total Body Rehabilitation Center are not licensed acupuncturists and do not practice “traditional” acupuncture. In contrast to most schools of acupuncture, dry needling is strictly based on Western medical principles and research.

How does “dry needling” work? – The exact mechanisms of dry needling are not fully understood. There are mechanical and biochemical processes that occur to reduce pain in the musculoskeletal and nervous system. Pain causes nerves to become “sensitized” (i.e. short circuit) in our extremities, spinal cord, and brain. If you have pain for an extended period of time, more nerves become “sensitized.” Dry needling works to deactivate these “sensitized” nerves. In addition, muscle spasms (or muscular triggerpoints) can be released by inserting a needle. Sometimes individuals will experience a “local twitch response” which helps to break the pain cycle. Similar to traditional acupuncture, “dry needling” is believed to stimulate one’s own healing capabilities, which includes an anti-inflammatory effect.

What type of problems can be treated with “dry needling”? – Dry needling can be used for a variety of musculoskeletal problems. Muscles are thought to be the primary problem contributing to the symptoms. The following conditions that can benefit from dry needling include, but are not limited to, neck, back, and shoulder pain, arm pain (i.e. tennis/golfer’s elbow and carpal tunnel syndrome), migraine and cervicogenic headaches, buttock and leg pain (i.e. sciatica, hamstring strains, calf tightness/spasms), plantar fasciitis, and post-surgical pain. Even conditions like shingles can benefit from dry needling therapy.
