

For the past several years, the issue of water supply, quality, and availability has been a hot topic in the United States. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has been working to develop a national water quality standard (NQS) for drinking water. The NQS is a set of guidelines that states and localities must follow to ensure that drinking water is safe and of high quality. The NQS is based on the latest scientific research and is designed to protect public health and the environment. The NQS is a key component of the Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA), which was passed in 1974. The SDWA is the primary federal law that regulates drinking water in the United States.
