

REMOTE HYDRAULIC CONTROL

There can be up to three remote control levers on the console, each having four positions, "raise", "neutral", "lower" and "float".

The speed of movement of auxiliary equipment is determined by the distance the lever is moved from neutral. If the lever is moved fully upward from neutral the equipment will rise quickly. If the lever is moved upward a short distance from neutral the equipment will rise slowly. When both levers are moved to the raise position, the cylinder with the lightest load will move first.

If the lever is moved downward from neutral until a resistance is felt, the equipment will lower quickly under hydraulic power. If the lever is moved a short distance downward from neutral the equipment will lower slowly under hydraulic power.

Moving the lever fully downward beyond the lower position will place the equipment in a "float" condition, free from hydraulic restraint, permitting the equipment to follow uneven ground contours.

NOTE: If equipment is attached that has single acting cylinders, always use the "float" position when lowering. Continual use of the "lower" position will cause overheating and possible damage to the hydraulic system.

Neutral and Float Lockout Bar

A lockout bar is provided so that control lever travel can be restricted as desired. A storage position is provided when it is necessary for the remote valves to be fully operational.
