Energy surveys and audits

Energy surveys

Energy surveys are carried out by BRE and other organisations to help building owners and managers understand the energy performance of their buildings. The surveys are carried out by a team of experts who will visit the building and carry out a series of tests and measurements to assess the energy performance of the building. The results of the survey will be used to produce a report which will identify the areas where the building is most energy inefficient and provide recommendations on how to improve its energy performance.

There are two main types of energy survey: a basic energy survey and a detailed energy survey. A basic energy survey is a quick and easy way to get a general idea of the energy performance of a building. A detailed energy survey is a more thorough and expensive way to get a more accurate picture of the energy performance of a building.

Both types of energy survey can be carried out on a range of buildings, from small domestic properties to large commercial buildings. The results of the survey will be used to produce a report which will identify the areas where the building is most energy inefficient and provide recommendations on how to improve its energy performance.

Energy surveys are a key part of the process of improving the energy performance of buildings. By identifying the areas where a building is most energy inefficient, building owners and managers can take steps to improve its energy performance and reduce its energy costs.

Energy surveys are also a key part of the process of meeting the requirements of the Energy Performance of Buildings Regulations (EPBR). The EPBR requires building owners and managers to ensure that their buildings meet a minimum energy performance standard. Energy surveys are used to assess the energy performance of buildings and to identify the areas where improvements are needed to meet the requirements of the EPBR.

Energy audits

Energy audits are carried out by BRE and other organisations to help building owners and managers understand the energy performance of their buildings.
