Integrated Models in Geography (Routledge Revivals) Richard Chorley, Peter Haggett, 2013-11-05 First published in 1967 this book explores the theme of geographical generalization or model building It is composed of five of the chapters from the original Models in Geography published in 1967 The first chapter broadly outlines this theme and examines the nature and function of generalized statements ranging from conceptual models to scale models in a geographical context The following chapters deal with mixed system model building in geography wherein data techniques and concepts in both physical and human geography are integrated The book contains chapters on organisms and ecosystems as geographical models as well as spatial patterns in human geography This text represents a robustly anti idiographic statement of modern work in one of the major branches of geography

The Ecology of a Salt Marsh L. R. Pomeroy, R. G. Wiegert, 2012-12-06 Ecologists have two long standing ways to study large ecosystems such as lakes forests and salt marsh estuaries In the first which G E Hutchinson has called the holological approach the whole ecosystem is first studied as a black box and its components are investigated as needed In the second which Hutchinson has called the merological approach the parts of the system are studied first and an attempt is then made to build up the whole from them For long term studies the holological approach has special advantages since the general patterns and tentative hypotheses that are first worked out help direct attention to the components of the system which need to be studied in greater detail In this approach teams of investigators focus on major functions and hypotheses and thereby coordinate their independent study efforts Thus although there have been waves as it were of investigators and graduate students working on different aspects of the Georgia salt marsh estuaries personnel at the Marine Institute on Sapelo Island changes every few years the emphasis on the holological approach has resulted in a highly differentiated and well coordinated long term study Very briefly the history of the salt marsh studies can be outlined as follows First the general patterns of food chains and other energy flows in the marshes and creeks were worked out and the nature of imports and exports to and from the system and its subsystems were delimited
