Chapters 10-12: Stress and the Endocrine System

1. How exactly do stress hormones function for their small size and so they can be easily secreted into the blood? Explain why stress hormones have evolved without a cell membrane coat. The reason is that: stress hormones are secreted into the blood stream and travel through the circulatory system to various cells. A very small and simple, hydrophilic and water-soluble stress hormone would be able to pass through the cell membrane and bind to receptors on the surface of the target cell. This is the mechanism of action for stress hormones. The binding of the hormone to the receptor is the first step in the signal transduction pathway that leads to the activation of the target cell.
2. How do stress hormones function? Explain the mechanism of action for stress hormones. The mechanism of action for stress hormones is that they bind to receptors on the surface of the target cell and activate a signal transduction pathway that leads to the activation of the target cell.
3. Identify the different stress hormones in your body. Describe the different types of stress hormones.
The stress hormones in your body are: cortisol, adrenaline, noradrenaline, and glucagon. Cortisol is a steroid hormone that is secreted by the adrenal cortex. Adrenaline and noradrenaline are catecholamines that are secreted by the adrenal medulla. Glucagon is a peptide hormone that is secreted by the pancreas.
4. Explain the mechanism of action for stress hormones. The mechanism of action for stress hormones is that they bind to receptors on the surface of the target cell and activate a signal transduction pathway that leads to the activation of the target cell.
5. Explain the mechanism of action for stress hormones. The mechanism of action for stress hormones is that they bind to receptors on the surface of the target cell and activate a signal transduction pathway that leads to the activation of the target cell.
