Charging Pump

The vane type charging pump (3) having four steel vanes, is built around the drive shaft. The capacity of the charging pump is greater than the requirements of the engine. The excess fuel is used to cool and lubricate the pump and is recirculated to the fuel tank. Charging pump pressure is controlled by a pressure regulating valve. Pump output is exposed to the automatic timing device (7) and to the pump housing. Charging pump pressure will vary with the speed of the engine.

Automatic Timing Device

Automatic timing advance is accomplished by the rotation of the cam roller retainer. Charging pump fuel pressure is exposed to one end of the spring loaded advance piston (7). As the pressure increases, due to an increase in pump speed, the piston moves over against the pressure of the advance spring. This rotates the roller retainer (5) in the advance direction.
