

the state support 90% of the cost of special education placements, whether in-district or out-of-district, beyond three times the per pupil average within the foundation formula with direct payment to the out-of-district placement by the Massachusetts Department of Education. This would ensure real relief to districts and a shared responsibility between local communities and the state.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Based on the data we have seen, we have to be realistic about the rising costs of special education. The increases in seriousness of disabilities in the population in general and the increase in the number of young children with moderate and severe disabilities will require greater expenditures in special education. Even though districts in Massachusetts are making their best efforts to provide regular education programs and services as an alternative to substantially separate special needs programs, these regular education programs and services require additional resources. Learning disabilities do not disappear just because a child is not classified as a special education student. These are realities policy makers need to face.

The long-term solution requires that the state and federal government support school districts in meeting the responsibility for special education. Communities, especially smaller communities, cannot meet the needs of children who cost the district over $20,000 without compromising other programs. Currently, those costs are borne within the financial capabilities of the community. This places an unfair burden on local communities when the responsibility for these children is best addressed through the collective efforts of all citizens within the state and throughout the nation.

One proposal for addressing the increasing costs is to have the local community provide for the educational costs and the state or federal government provide for medical, psychiatric, physical therapy, or occupational therapy services. Although schools should not be required to address medical problems, it becomes so difficult to define which service is educational and which is medical that we believe it is best to find a resolution that handles the problem more holistically.

The only effective approach is to increase the state's and federal government's financial responsibility for special education.

The recommendation for increasing the state's responsibility for special education costs is not new. The final report of the first full review of special education in Massachusetts in 1982, entitled Implementing Massachusetts' Special Education Law: A Statewide Assessment, recommended:

It is strongly recommended that the department (Department of Education) and affected constituencies work to see that Chapter 70 ensures adequate funding of the real cost of special education. First, significantly more local aid needs to be paid through the education formula of Chapter 70....

Given the degree of local resentment over special education transportation costs, the study staff recommends that the Department of Education take action. The local perception that the state mandates services but won't pay the
