Teaching the Literatures of the American Civil War

Colleen Glenney Boggs, 2016-08-01 When Abraham Lincoln met Harriet Beecher Stowe in 1863 he reportedly greeted her as the little woman who wrote the book that started this Great War To this day Uncle Tom's Cabin serves as a touchstone for the war Yet few works have been selected to represent the Civil War's literature even though historians have filled libraries with books on the war itself This volume helps teachers address the following questions What is the relation of canonical works to the multitude of occasional texts that were penned in response to the Civil War and how can students understand them together Should an approach to war literature reflect the chronology of historical events or focus instead on thematic clusters generic forms and theoretical concerns How do we introduce students to archival materials that sometimes support at other times resist the close reading practices in which they have been trained Twenty three essays cover such topics as visiting historical sites to teach the literature using digital materials teaching with anthologies soldiers dime novels Confederate women's diaries songs speeches the conflicted theme of treason and the double edged theme of brotherhood how battlefield photographs synthesize fact and fiction and the roles in the war played by women by slaves and by African American troops A section of the volume provides a wealth of resources for teachers
