

The Civil Rights Act of 1964

A Step Toward Equality

On July 2, 1964, President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This act made it illegal to treat someone in a group unfairly because of ethnicity, religion, or gender. This type of unfair treatment is called discrimination. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 banned discrimination and protected the rights of minorities. Rights that were protected under the act included a person's right to vote, use public facilities, and seek employment. The act also created the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), which was set up to handle complaints of discrimination and bring legal action against those who violate the act.

A Segregated Nation

For many years, Americans lived in a country where the law of the land was the United States Constitution. The Constitution says that all citizens are equal. But in the 1950s, many people in the South believed that white people should be treated differently from Black people.

One of the things that was different was segregation. This means that white and Black people were kept apart. In the 1950s, many people in the South believed that white people should be treated differently from Black people. This was called segregation. In the 1950s, many people in the South believed that white people should be treated differently from Black people. This was called segregation.

What Are Civil Rights?

Civil rights are the basic rights that all people should have. These rights include the right to vote, the right to work, and the right to be treated fairly. Civil rights are the rights that all people should have.

- The right to vote
- The right to work
