

The digestive system

We all need to eat food to live. Food gives you energy and helps your body to grow, repair itself, and stay healthy. Your digestive system is designed to get as many nutrients from your food as possible.

The human digestive system includes the stomach, which processes food. Some animals, like cows (right), need four stomachs because they eat grass and hay, which are difficult to digest.

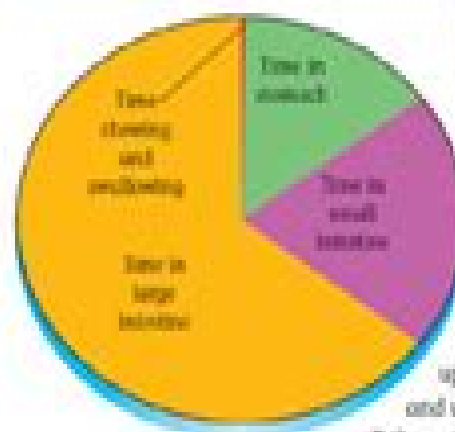

The long tube of your digestive system measures an amazing 8 metres long - about six times longer than your height.

Parts of the digestive system

Your digestive system is like a long tube that is folded inside your body. When you swallow your food, it passes down the food pipe (oesophagus) into your stomach, where it is broken down and mixed into a watery mash. The stomach also releases acids and other chemicals to dissolve your food. The soupy food then moves into your small and large intestines, where nutrients are passed into the bloodstream. Your liver, gall bladder and pancreas also supply chemicals that help in the digestive process.

Time to digest

Food takes up to 24 hours to pass through your digestive system. Although chewing and swallowing take a minute or so, your food will spend up to four hours in your stomach. Half-digested food then spends up to four hours in your small intestine, and up to 16 hours in the large intestine while all the nutrients are absorbed. The leftover waste is then expelled when you go to the toilet.

Your Body, Your Genes, Your Digestion, and Your Metabolism Christopher Brandlin, 2013-10-18 In Christopher Brandlin's third book he explains how our genetics affect our metabolisms and our ability to digest various foods In addition to our genetics our surrounding environments can cause damage to our immune systems Due to the rise of the Agricultural Revolution in the United States more grains have been processed refined and became readily available for everyone's consumption However research studies have proven that the over consumption of processed grains has caused an increase in obesity and several autoimmune disorders The purpose of this book is to explain how each person's body can be affected by different foods based on their genetics and other surrounding circumstances. This book also slightly revises some of Mr Brandlin's recommendations from his previous books based on new research. Gut Health Secrets: How Gut Health Affects Your Whole Body & Mind Rachel Miner, 2019-05-21. What we eat affects our bodies in many different ways. From changing our shape and size to giving us the fuel to run. From keeping our hair and skin looking good to affecting our risk of developing diseases like diabetes or cancer. However what we eat can also affect each of us differently. This is because we all have different versions of genes molecular regulators and even gut bacteria that affect how we respond to the foods that we eat. For example one person may have versions of genes that means that they process metabolize some food components differently from how other people do. Another person may have versions of genes that make it easier for them to gain weight. To understand how different foods affect our health and our risk of developing diseases scientists use many different types of experiments. These range from laboratory studies in cells to studies carried out directly in humans that measure how we react to specific nutrients and foods or to our whole eating pattern. Samples of blood saliva and urine can be analyzed to reveal lots of information about how each person's DNA and individual biology changes the way food affects their health. New methods called omics technologies allow us to quickly measure all molecules of a certain type that are present in a sample. For example genomics is used to characterize all the genes and different versions of genes in a particular person transcriptomics measures all the genes that are switched on in that person and proteomics and metabolomics measure the corresponding proteins and small molecules or metabolites This gives us a huge amount of new information about how what a person eats affects their metabolism and health These kinds of studies can also help us to understand why particular foods might affect one person differently from another By better understanding how the effects of foods and nutrients change from person to person based on their DNA and other molecular regulators we can start to find which types of diets may be better for different people This idea is called personalized nutrition For example personalized nutrition might provide a basis for dietary advice to help individual people improve their diet and to stay healthy This approach might also help find the best diet for people already suffering from a disease that is affected by diet This collection of articles focuses on the latest research in the field of nutrigenomics from advances in technologies used for this research to how foods are processed in the body and what this means for our health At the core of the collection is the application of nutrigenomics as a basis to personalize nutritional advice for individuals and at a public health level This collection has been organized by NuGO and the NuGO Early Career Network ECN NuGo is an association of Universities and Research Institutes worldwide focusing on research on molecular nutrition personalized nutrition nutrigenomics and nutritional systems biology
