

Is It a Bird? Is It a Fish?

Explorers discovering new lands across the Atlantic Ocean saw an extraordinary creature—a fish that propelled itself through the ocean waters with wings like a bird! Or, wait: was it a bird that lived in the ocean waters like a fish? This strange clown-like creature with its bright orange beak and black feathers was seen using its wings at one moment to dive deep into the ocean waters and then to fly rapidly through the sky. To confuse the explorers even more, this unusual “fish bird” made strange, deep guttural sounds like a moaning cow. Because the explorers feared this mythical creature, they invented tales that portrayed it as rising from pieces of wood from shipwrecks.

Today these seabirds are no longer feared, in part because scientists have studied to learn more about them. Now known as the Atlantic puffin, this seabird enjoys a habitat in the ice-cold ocean water near Iceland. These ocean-loving birds seem to fly underwater using their wings to dive deep into the sea where they feed on small fish. A puffin usually catches about 10 fish during one dive, although one scientist witnessed a puffin catching 62 small fish in one dive! Puffins spend the majority of their lives on the water. When they are not diving for food, they float contentedly on the cold ocean waves. Young puffins spend years at sea without ever coming to land.

When it is time to hatch and raise their chicks, the birds build burrows in the high rocky crags of the cliffs along the ocean edge. These provide a place to protect their eggs from the cold wind and rain. In the water, puffins are quite graceful, but, on the land, they waddle and hop from rock to rock. In the air, puffins can fly at speeds up to 55 miles per hour (88.51 kmh).

The puffin is about 10 inches tall. Its feathers are black and white. It has a big, brightly colored beak. Its orange webbed feet look like duck feet. It has yellow eyes. Puffins are often called “sea parrots.”

extraordinary: beyond what is normal or expected propelled: moved through water
guttural: a harsh sound made in the throat burrow: shelter made by an animal
