Study Guide

Background

Biologists must consider the selective barrier called the plasma membrane according to their physical and chemical properties. It thus presents its structure to the external energy present in the form of a concentration gradient, to the external pressure gradient. Plasma membranes exhibit only a limited capacity to pass the cell. Substances move from an area of higher concentration to an area of lower concentration in a process called diffusion.

In living organisms, and even in artificial membranes called dialysis tubing, the small molecules (O₂, glucose, amino acids, etc.) pass through the membrane (dialysis tubing) and the large molecules (proteins, nucleic acids, etc.) do not. This is called selective permeability. The dialysis tubing is a selectively permeable membrane that allows small molecules to pass through it but not large molecules. Small molecules will be allowed to pass through while large molecules will not.

I. Diffusion across a selective permeable membrane

1. Diffusion is the process by which small molecules move from an area of higher concentration to an area of lower concentration.
2. This shows that for the purpose of water, the dialysis tubing is selectively permeable.
3. Dialysis tubing is a selectively permeable membrane with selective permeability. The only selective barrier for dialysis membrane is the size of the molecule.
