Forging a Socio-Legal Approach to Environmental Harms Tiffany Bergin, Emanuela Orlando, 2017-06-14

Environmental harms exert a significant toll and pose substantial economic costs on societies around the world. Although such harms have been studied from both legal and social science perspectives, these disciplinary specific approaches are not on their own fully able to address the complexity of these environmental challenges. Many legal approaches, for example, are limited by their inattention to the motivations behind environmental offences, whereas many social science approaches are hindered by an insufficient grounding in current legislative frameworks. This edited collection constitutes a pioneering attempt to overcome these limitations by uniting legal and social science perspectives. Together, the book's contributors forge an innovative socio-legal approach to more effectively respond to and prevent environmental harms around the world. Integrating theoretical and empirical work, the book presents carefully selected illustrations of how legal and social science scholarship can be brought together to improve policies. The various chapters examine how a socio-legal approach can ultimately lead to a more comprehensive understanding of environmental harms, as well as to innovative and effective responses to such environmental offences.

Asbestos Barbara Hadley, 2015-08-10

Asbestos is not just a problem of the past nor is there an identifiable point in the future by which we can stop worrying about its legacy. In various countries around the world, asbestos production and consumption continues unabated, storing up problems for the future. In countries that have banned the use of asbestos, such as the UK, the continued presence of this material in buildings public and private will have consequences for decades to come Asbestos the Future Risk is a special report that pulls together the historical background as to how this mineral came to be so widely used the medical view of asbestos related diseases and their treatment the current patterns of consumption that indicate where future claims may come from and current practice for dealing with asbestos in the built environment exposure to which has spread asbestos related diseases to people outside those occupations that worked directly with asbestos Asbestos the Future Risk provides an all round update on the present state of knowledge and sets out the challenges faced by claimants governments private companies public authorities lawyers and insurers Environmental Policies in the Third World O.P.

Environmental Technology in Developing Countries Harvey F. Ludwig,1987 Ecological Policy and Politics in Developing Countries Uday Desai,1998-04-16 Examines in depth the ecological problems policies and politics of ten major developing countries Growing Pains Walter Wehrmeyer,Yacob Mulugetta,2017-10-19 Environmental management is a global phenomenon embracing all businesses in all countries whether or not there already exists an organised response to managing environmental impacts Today there are gross inequalities between the world s richest and poorest nations in terms of income distribution consumption patterns access to resources and environmental impact Yet both the developed north and the developing south are committed at least in words to achieving sustainable development Public awareness of environmental issues in the North has been rising in recent years and further degradation is now largely minimized through more stringent regulatory regimes voluntary agreements and growing consumer and stakeholder pressure on corporations Still the north is continuing to lead an environmentally unsustainable lifestyle as environmental improvements are nullified by overall increases in consumption levels In the south a billion people still do not have access to the most basic needs Poor countries need to accelerate their consumption growth if they are to ensure that the lives of their people are enriched However with rapid economic growth and corresponding increases in consumption now under way their environmental impact is soon to become substantially greater In a world that strives towards stemming global crises such as climate change the path already taken by the rich and high growth economies over the past century cannot be repeated by the south if the desired objective is to create a future that is truly sustainable Growing Pains examines environmental management in the south from a number of perspectives It is designed to stimulate the discussion about the role that corporations and national and international organizations play in sustainable development It does not offer panaceas as each country has its own problems and opportunities and after almost 50 years of failed panacea oriented economic development policy transfer from the north to the south it is time to abandon hope for universal solutions and instead look to individual approaches that work The book is divided into five themes globalization the role of business a focus on national strategies trade and the environment and the organizational and structural challenges of sustainable development With contributions from an outstanding collection of authors in both the developed and developing worlds including UNIDO the Thailand Environment Institute Arthur D Little Inc Shell Peru IUCN the Russian Academy of Sciences and IIED this important and unique new book presents a body of work that will provide essential reading for businesses working in developing countries environmental and developmental NGOs and researchers engaged in the debate and sharing of best practice in this increasingly critical subject area Globalization, Political Institutions and the Environment in Developing Countries Gabriele

Spilker,2013-01-04 Though industrialized countries are usually the ones indicted when environmental pollution is discussed over the few last years the rate of emissions in developing countries has increased by a startling amount The fallout from this increase is evidenced by the struggle of cities like Beijing to improve their air quality Yet there also exist developing countries such as Thailand that have managed to limit their emissions to more tolerable levels raising the question why are some developing countries more willing or able to take care of their environment than others In this volume Gabriele Spilker proposes two factors for the differences in developing countries environmental performance integration into the international system and domestic political institutions Focusing on developing countries generally but also closely examining important global powers such as China and India Spilker employs a rigorous quantitative analysis to demonstrate the importance of considering various aspects of the international system in order to draw more comprehensive conclusions about how globalization affects environmental performance She asserts that democratic political institutions can shield developing countries from the negative consequences of either trade or foreign direct investment But at the same time developing countries by avoiding demanding commitments are more likely to use environmental treaties as a cover than as a real plan of action Adding a new dimension to the existing body of research on environmental quality and commitment Spilker convincingly demonstrates how international and domestic political factors interact to shape developing countries ability and willingness to care for their natural environment The Environmental Divide R. C. Das,1998 Environmental Information in Developing Nations Anna Da Soledada Vieira,1985-07-23 Vieira focuses on the relationship between environmental pollution and socioeconomic underdevelopment and emphasizes the role information can play in the protection of the Third World environment She identifies the main governmental and nongovernmental institutions related to important aspects of the Third World environment pollution control sanitation public health and development and alternative technologies The Brazilian institutional panorama is analyzed and then compared with Mexican Indian and Egyptian systems in an effort to identify common points that might be applied to the Third World as a whole Finally she recommends the establishment of an informal international network of both nongovernmental institutions and individuals for the exchange of information considered important to the developing countries or pertinent to the environmental realities of the Third World Providing the core for such a network is an appendix listing organizations interested in the environment and development of the Third World The Environmental Challenge for Developing Countries International congress for technology and technology change$, (1982 : Pittsburgh),University Center for International Studies,1982 Our Common Future World Commission on Environment and Development,1987 Developing Countries and International Environmental Negotiations Pablo Gutman,1992 Environmental Management for Developing Countries Günter Tharun, Environmental protection applied to developing countries M.
