

Exercise 1: The importance of cells

- All organisms are made of cells
  - o Many organisms are single-celled
  - o Even for multicellular organisms, the cells are the basic unit of structure and function
- The cells are composed of many chemical parts
- The cells are defined by their chemical composition

Exercise 2: The study of cells, microscopes and microscopy and the use of light microscopy

- The discovery and study of cells progressed with the invention of microscopes in 1590 and their improvement in the 17th century
- An upright microscope (LM), visible light passes through the specimen and then through glass lenses
  - o The lenses collect light such that the image is magnified and the light is sent to your eyes
- Microscopes vary in magnification and resolving power
  - o Magnification is the amount an object is magnified in the final eye
  - o Resolving power is a measure of image clarity
    - o It is the minimum size between two points can be separated and still be distinguished as two separate points
    - o Resolution is limited by the shortest wavelength of the radiation used for imaging
- The minimum wavelength of light microscopes allows LM magnification (only) that end of a small spectrum
- Light microscopes can magnify effectively to about 1,000 times the size of the actual specimen
  - o At higher magnifications, the resolution
- Structures observed in the LM including those withered distinct and well-defined particles and components to be studied or labeled as they exist in life
- Since a light microscope can observe individual cells, it cannot resolve much of the internal structure, especially in organelles
- To observe smaller structures, we use an electron microscope (EM), which focuses a beam of electrons through the specimen or onto the surface
  - o Because electrons is indirectly related to wavelength, used electron microscopes require electron beams have physical wavelengths than visible light, have lower resolution
  - o Consequently, the resolution of a typical EM could reach 0.05 micrometer (only), but the practical limit is about 0.1 nm
- Transmission electron microscope (TEM) was used mainly to study the structure of organelles of cells
  - o A EM can use an electron beam through a thin section of the specimen
  - o The image is focused and magnified by electromagnets
