Bough: A Study in Magic and Religion (Complete) Sir James George Frazer, 1957-01-01 For some time I have been preparing a general work on primitive superstition and religion Among the problems which had attracted my attention was the hitherto unexplained rule of the Arician priesthood and last spring it happened that in the course of my reading I came across some facts which combined with others I had noted before suggested an explanation of the rule in question As the explanation if correct promised to throw light on some obscure features of primitive religion I resolved to develop it fully and detaching it from my general work to issue it as a separate study This book is the result Now that the theory which necessarily presented itself to me at first in outline has been worked out in detail I cannot but feel that in some places I may have pushed it too far If this should prove to have been the case I will readily acknowledge and retract my error as soon as it is brought home to me Meantime my essay may serve its purpose as a first attempt to solve a difficult problem and to bring a variety of scattered facts into some sort of order and system A justification is perhaps needed of the length at which I have dwelt upon the popular festivals observed by European peasants in spring at midsummer and at harvest It can hardly be too often repeated since it is not yet generally recognised that in spite of their fragmentary character the popular superstitions and customs of the peasantry are by far the fullest and most trustworthy evidence we possess as to the primitive religion of the Aryans Indeed the primitive Aryan in all that regards his mental fibre and texture is not extinct He is amongst us to this day The great intellectual and moral forces which have revolutionised the educated world have scarcely affected the peasant In his inmost beliefs he is what his forefathers were in the days when forest trees still grew and squirrels played on the ground where Rome and London now stand Achieving Your Best in High School Charles P.
