Globalization and Innovation Nevine El-Mallakh,2020 This thesis contributes to the literature in International Economics and Innovation Economics In the first chapter by documenting new complementarity effects of Foreign Direct Investments FDI openness and the reduction of tariff barriers on imports of intermediate goods on domestic firm productivity resulting in a transfer of input related knowledge that allows domestic firms to reduce their transaction cost and or to import better quality inputs Using firm level Indian data spanning the liberalization episode in the early 1990s findings of a Difference in Differences identification strategy relying on the exogenous reforms show the existence of this described spillover effects Furthermore in chapter 2 technology improvement effects in terms of technological investments are identified By extending a heterogenous firm model to explain such effects two types of spillovers caused by the exposure of domestic firms to multinational firms in terms of investments in technology are identified vertical and horizontal Finally in the last chapter a unique inventor patent dataset for 33 OECD countries is use to estimate the effect of technological advancements in particular the fall in broadband Internet price on the geographic distribution of innovative activities that materialize in patents at city technology level The fall in quality adjusted price of ICT increases the dissemination of knowledge and data It also strengthen the intensity of remote interactions Results show an increase in the concentration of patenting activities in top cities suggesting a path dependence and Marshallian type spillovers TransArea Ottmar Ette,2016 Ottmar Ette s

TransArea proceeds from the thesis that globalization is not a recent phenomenon but rather a process of long duration that may be divided into four main phases of accelerated globalization These phases connect our present across the world s widely divergent modern eras to the period of early modern history Ette demonstrates how the literatures of the world make possible a tangible perception of that which constitutes Life both of our planet and on our planet which may only be understood through the application of multiple logics There is no substitute for the knowledge of literature it is the knowledge of life from life This English translation will be of great interest to English speaking scholars in the fields of Global

Confrontations Over the East Asian Developmental State Michael I. (Michael Irwin) Spaulding, 2001 Essays on Globalization Stanley Bon Watt, 2006 Essays on Globalization and Structural Change Guillermo Gallacher, 2019 In this dissertation I explore the relationship between structural change and globalization In particular I focus on the impact of international trade on sectoral labor markets In Chapter 1 by using a growth accounting framework I provide quantitative estimates of the impact of international trade on sectoral employment shares in the presence of structural change I find that in the USA between 1995 and 2014 international trade accounts for 16 percent of the decline in the goods sector employment share Across countries the impact of trade on the goods sector employment share is heterogeneous in sign and magnitudes and is correlated with comparative advantage in the goods sector I then introduce a Ricardian model of trade with structural change to shed light on the comparative advantage mechanism In the data and in the model international trade mitigates structural change forces in countries with a comparative advantage in the goods sector while it magnifies structural change forces in countries with a comparative advantage in the service sector The framework and results I present suggest that trade policy has a limited role in bringing the manufacturing jobs back In Chapter 2 I first document that changes in sectoral relative wages have been heterogeneous across countries and then show that these changes in sectoral relative wages matter for understanding employment reallocation I then ask why do sectoral relative wages evolve over time I argue that a likely explanation is the existence of idiosyncratic sectoral labor demand shocks in the context of employment reallocation frictions I argue that aggregate trade integration can generate such shifts The intuition is simple trade liberalization tends to increase labor demand in sectors in which the country has a comparative advantage and to decrease labor demand in sectors in the rest of sectors If labor cannot fully reallocate after such shocks wages tend to adjust relative wages tend to increase in sectors in which the country has a comparative advantage and tend to shrink in the rest of the economy Trade integration thus impacts sectoral relative wages and that this impact varies across countries I introduce a model of international trade with labor market frictions and show that countries with a comparative advantage in the goods service sectors tend to experience increasing relative wages in the goods service sector Using the Revealed Comparative Advantage Index I confirm this relationship in the data Employment reallocation frictions thus shed light on the empirical relevance of the Ricardian model of international trade Globalization and the Myths of Free Trade Anwar Shaikh, 2007-01-24 Written by an international team of contributors this book is a critical examination of the ongoing enterprise of neoliberalism its history theory practice and most of all of its outcomes Globalization and Development Shigeru Otsubo, 2016 Essays on Globalization and Economic Development Nan Xu, 2011 Globalisation Frances Ilmberger, Alan Robinson, 2002 The Globalization of Goods and Capital Flows Benedikt Rydzek, 2014 Surprises of Globalization Moisés Naím, Globalization, 2003
