Abstract: This research was designed to determine the extent to which the use of the Internet by individuals with mental health problems is associated with the use of other mental health services. The study was conducted using a cross-sectional design. The sample consisted of 100 individuals with mental health problems who were recruited from a community mental health center. The study found that the use of the Internet was associated with the use of other mental health services. The study also found that the use of the Internet was associated with a greater knowledge of mental health services and a greater willingness to seek help. The study has implications for the development of mental health services that are accessible to individuals with mental health problems.
