Cave Ecology Oana Teodora Moldovan, Ľubomír Kováč, Stuart Halse, 2019-01-05 Cave organisms are the monsters of the underground world and studying them invariably raises interesting questions about the ways evolution has equipped them to survive in permanent darkness and low energy environments Undertaking ecological studies in caves and other subterranean habitats is not only challenging because they are difficult to access but also because the domain is so different from what we know from the surface with no plants at the base of food chains and with a nearly constant microclimate year round The research presented here answers key questions such as how a constant environment can produce the enormous biodiversity seen below ground what adaptations and peculiarities allow subterranean organisms to thrive and how they are affected by the constraints of their environment This book is divided into six main parts which address the habitats of cave animals their complex diversity the environmental factors that support that diversity individual case studies of cave ecosystems and of the conservation challenges they face all of which culminate in proposals for future research directions Given its breadth of coverage it offers an essential reference guide for graduate students and established researchers alike
