

The Civil Rights Act of 1964

A Step Toward Equality

On July 2, 1964, President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This act made it illegal to treat someone in a group unfairly because of ethnicity, religion, or gender. This type of unfair treatment is called discrimination. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 banned discrimination and protected the rights of minorities. Rights that were protected under the act included a person's right to vote, use public facilities, and seek employment. The act also created the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), which was set up to handle complaints of discrimination and bring legal action against those who violate the act.

A Segregated Nation

For many years, Americans lived in a country where the law of the land was the United States Constitution. This document guaranteed that all citizens, regardless of race or ethnicity, had the same rights. However, in many parts of the country, people of different races were treated differently.

One of the most common ways that people were treated differently was in the way they were allowed to vote. In many places, people of different races were not allowed to vote. This was because of a law called the Jim Crow laws. These laws were named after a character in a play who was a racist. The laws were designed to keep people of different races apart and to make sure that people of different races were not allowed to vote.

What Are Civil Rights?

Civil rights are the basic rights that all people have. These rights include the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. These rights are guaranteed to all people by the United States Constitution.

- The right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness
- The right to be treated fairly
- The right to be heard
- The right to be free from government
- The right to be free from discrimination

Separate But Equal

The Supreme Court of the United States decided that the separate but equal doctrine was unconstitutional. This doctrine was a law that said that people of different races could live in separate areas, but they had to have the same rights. The Supreme Court decided that this was not fair.

The Civil Rights Movement

The Civil Rights Movement was a series of protests and actions that were led by people who wanted to end discrimination. One of the most famous leaders of the movement was Martin Luther King Jr. He was a minister who spoke for the rights of all people. He was killed in 1968.

People in the Civil Rights Movement wanted to end discrimination. They wanted to make sure that all people had the same rights. They wanted to make sure that people of different races were treated equally. They wanted to make sure that people of different races were allowed to vote. They wanted to make sure that people of different races were allowed to live in the same places. They wanted to make sure that people of different races were allowed to work in the same jobs. They wanted to make sure that people of different races were allowed to be friends.

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 was a landmark piece of legislation. It was the first time that the federal government had passed a law that was designed to end discrimination. It was a big step toward equality.
