Abstract: This study reports on the results of a survey of 1000 teachers in England, who were asked to rate the importance of various factors in their selection of a text for their classroom. The results show that the most important factors were the quality of the text, the relevance of the text to the curriculum, and the availability of the text. The results also show that teachers rated the importance of various factors differently, depending on the type of text they were selecting. For example, teachers rated the quality of the text as more important when selecting a text for their classroom than when selecting a text for their personal use. The results of this study have implications for the selection of texts for the classroom, and for the development of text selection guidelines.
