Help Your Child Cope During the Holidays

The holiday season can be a very hard time for children in foster care and may even cause turmoil within your family. There are a many ways you can proactively interact with them to efforts to help reduce their emotional pain. Here are some ideas on how to go about handling "hard to handle" situations:

- ✦ Do not take it personally. The children we care for most often have significant abandonment issues. The holiday can lead a child to act out in ways that can be interpreted as disrespect toward us. Give each child through their circumstances and help them to figure out what is bothering them rather than simply reacting by being firmer and better.
- ✦ Be mindful of the things that you say about the children—even in a joking manner. If you are frustrated or upset with a child, try to discuss with your particular behavior that the child is displaying today. Please ask for support from your case manager, therapist, etc. We all get frustrated and disappointed from time to time when we see a lack of progress or when our children do things that we wish they would not do. Remember to lean on each other for support and not let things that can be helpful for the case that we are charged to care for.
- ✦ Do not talk about the child's personal information to others, particularly if the child can hear you. These children are very sensitive to what our feelings are about them and they have a hard time trusting others. For them to hear our share their personal information or hear you say things that indicate that you are not happy with them can be a serious barrier to that involvement.

Centerstone wishes you a HAPPY HOLIDAY!
