Ben Shneiderman, and John Vitor

This report summarizes results of the first EC/NSF joint Advanced Research Workshop, which identified key research challenges and opportunities in information technology.

The Joint European Commission/National Science Foundation Strategy Group first met in September 1998 as a result of a joint collaboration agreement between the EC and NSF in August 1998. The collaboration aims to facilitate the joint development of knowledge and applications in key emerging science and technology areas of mutual interest. Successful cooperation holds the promise of more cost-effective investment of research funds in the United States and the European Union.

The group recommended a series of research workshops to enable early identification of key research challenges and opportunities in information technology. Each workshop should bring together eminent scientists and technologists in the area addressed, and the themes would emanate from the research community.

The Strategy Group identified a number of possible themes. These included human-centered computing and virtual environments (VEs), large-scale scientific databases, and intelligent implants. Scientists in this Strategy Group included Andy van Dam (Brown University, USA), Paul Messina (California Institute of Technology, USA), Rae Earnshaw (University of Bradford, UK), Giorgio Buccarini (University of Bologna, Italy), Rolf Tackenberg (University of Bonn, Germany), and Gilles Kahn (Paris, France).

The group agreed that the first joint research workshop should concentrate on the themes of human-centered computing and VEs. Human-centered computing is perceived as an area of strategic importance because of the move towards greater decentralization and decomposition in the location and provision of computation. The area of VEs is one where increased collaboration should speed progress in solving some of the more intractable problems in building effective applications. Further workshops should follow, either on separate topics or on specific issues arising out of this first workshop.

Objectives of the workshop

The workshop concentrated on the research frontiers of human-computer interaction and VEs. Of particular relevance are the desires that interaction center more around human needs and capabilities, and that the human-environment be considered in VEs and in other contextual information-processing activities. The overall goal is to make users more effective in their information or communication tasks by reducing learning times, speeding up performance, lowering error rates, facilitating retention, and increasing subjective satisfaction. We believe that improved designs can dramatically increase effectiveness for users ranging from novices to experts, of diverse cultures, with varying educational backgrounds. Their lives could be made more satisfying, their work safer, their learning easier, and their health better. Research areas to address included

- High-level content descriptions and their access, such as metadata and MPEG-7
- Reduced cognitive load and more scope for creativity
- Cross-disciplinary interaction and how to make it work
- Interaction in specific social contexts and with cultural differences
- Universality and the problems of the differently abled
- Interaction styles and their implications
- Consistency of cognition models across information appliances
- Paradigms for emerging new kinds of interaction, beyond WIMP (Windows, icons, mice, and pull-down menus) interfaces: multimodal and perceptual user interfaces
- Challenges for VE technology and interfaces
- Usability issues and measuring the effectiveness of symbiosis
