

I don't know what to write about. I repeat. I do NOT know what to write about. People keep giving me ideas but, sigh, if only it was that easy.
— David Crossen, fourth grade

Students are learning many strategies that help them generate ideas to write about. Below are a few strategies your child has learned. When they are a bit, suggest some of the following to help them get over their writer's block.

- It also means it's necessary to spend a little extra time going out to significant places, all special moments in your life, like the first dancing at home, your first wedding. When you have a few minutes alone, take a cue to write about it.
- Start collecting little notes. If people hand a particular thing every again and again, write it down, record it, especially if you're told if you don't know many details, go back to the family member who told it and ask them more about it.
- Look around. When you are at home, look at your life, like your clothes too, a particular day, an old picture, what colour is in your outfit?
