

Historical Colonialism - Past and Present

- One way to expand colonies and develop commercial activity was through "Concession Companies"
- Concession companies were monopoly traders set up by the mother country to exploit a resource or area of the colony

- The companies not only expanded trade but also acted as agents for the colonial government in remote places
- Most of the companies faded into obscurity over the years but two stand out
- The first is the East India Company. This British company was given a monopoly on the tea trade. To promote and protect it they built their own armed navy, traded in opium to get cheap tea and promoted the interests of the British Empire
- The second is the Hudson Bay Company. Originally formed to hold a monopoly on the fur trade, the Hudson Bay Company grew, expanded and still thrives to this day
